WOMAN OF FASHION.

Trilby's Influence on the American Foot Has Succumbed.

Uncomfortable High French Heels Are Again the Rage.—The Common-Sense Shoe Had No Show—Evening Gowns and Toilets.

COPYRIGHT, 1905.

Trilby's influence upon the American foot, though potent while it lasted, has finally succumbed to the rival claims of a much more important person. Trilby, of course, was only a blanchisseuse, while her rival was a great queen who, even though she was born under an unlucky star, is entitled to more consideration in questions of taste than one who, at the very height of her popularity, was no more than a singing woman.

Poor Marie Antoinette lost her head for starting extravagant styles for which the French public objected to paying, and what a waste it would be to become a martyr to a fashion that dies out in a few years to give place to an ugly common-sense shoe, for instance!

Besides, Trilby's fine figure and the foot that went with it may have been all right for the posing that she did so well; but when it comes to dancing, who would care to trip the light fantastic in anything like a pair of discarded army slippers?

A year ago there was a slight tendency to make the large foot fashionable, and the sensible people began to cheer up and congratulate themselves that reform was here. But now their hopes are dashed and their kettle literally kicked over by so small and dainty an object as the high-heeled French dancing slipper. And the heel is not merely high; it has that deadly slope towards the middle of the sole which gives physicians such a lucrative business.

All the new slippers are made after this pattern, and it will be impossible for the common-sense girl to have any other style unless she has her last as well as her shoe made to order. There are plenty of slippers that are made to order, but they are pretty likely to be made on the regular French last in spite of protests. The slippers that are ordered in this way are made to match the gown with which they are to be worn. It takes about half a yard of silk brocade to make a pair. After the shoe material for them, without loading them down with jewels.

A brocade gown of this type is trimmed with jeweled pendants. The trimming is put on the sleeves in an oval pattern with the fringe of pendants dangling all around the puff. The soft fish-like yoke that knots in front is trimmed with jewels radiating from the knot, and pendants form a sort of basque to the close-fitting bodice.

Another gown which shows the popularity of the shoulderless sleeve is made of a pale gold-colored silk, brocade in pale blue. The corsage is cut very low, and is bordered with a blue and gold gallow trimmings, which also forms the shoulder straps.

The empire gown which is never a general favorite, but is always becoming to some, is now worn in heavy materials like velvet, for instance. The popularity of this style of gown was hurt by its imitation in cheap materials, which hung limp and ungainly, very unlike the regal folds which graced the form of the beautiful Josephine.

A blue velvet evening dress trimmed with old point shows to great advantage in the empire cut. Such a gown, cut very low, back and front, fits tight except at the back where the long train is fastened with a knot of ribbon to the low corsage. Epaullets of old point are fastened at the shoulders and fall fanlike over the large sleeves. The woman who wore this gown had her hair loosely knotted at the nape of her neck, with a wreath of flowers around it. The hair was parted from the tip of the forehead to the coil, and there wasn't a trace of bang to be seen.

Gloves are white or else match one of the many tints in the material. A silk skirt that I saw today had blue, green, cream and pink, all beautifully blended together. There were immense green and pink maple leaves on a cream ground, with blue roses. No regard for nature's own taste in the matter of tints, but that's art, of course!

Some of the long velvet opera cloaks are enough to set one dreaming of duchesses and princesses and all the other people who started us on this road to financial ruin. There are long blue ones with gold applique trimmings, and brocade silk linings. These are quite regal, and will probably be called Marlborough cloaks, to remind us of our American duchess.

But ordinary people cannot afford to do any more than dream of, or at most is decided upon, the stocking is ordered to match.

The shoe dealer tells you that you can wear a black shoe and stocking with any kind of gown, provided the shoe be patent leather. These are so elaborately gotten up that they are certainly well suited to evening wear. They have the trimmings of brilliants and cut steel which invade every adjunct of the toilet. Some have cut steel straps across the ankle, but most of them have buckles of brilliants or steel as ornaments to the low vamp.

Gowns which appear at evening parties have the quaint, old-fashioned look that reminds one of colonial Thanksgivings and revolutionary cotton parties. The long shoulder continues in favor, whether the neck be cut high or low. The sleeve without connection with its shoulder strap has not gone out of fashion, and it is still quite a favorite with the Parisian.

Sleeves are heavily trimmed with jet or jeweled trimming, and, while it was formerly sufficient to get enough for a square neck, and perhaps a belt, Mme. Antocrat now looks inquiringly at you and says: "And your sleeves? How are you going to trim them?" As if it were not bad enough to buy six yards of gaze upon, such splendor. They must be content with neck ruffs that well-nigh hide their faces, as if the wearers were ashamed to be seen in so short a cloak. The key note of these neck ruffs is velvet, but the less it shows the more beautiful the ruff. One of grey velvet, has a chinchilla edge and is nearly covered with a satin bow at the back of the neck.

Black mouseline de soie, accordion plaited, is a favorite material for them. It must be massed in the front and back as much as possible, and trimmed with loops of wide ribbon that stand out over the shoulders, and up against the back hair.

Such a neck ruff with a flower bonnet is a favorite theater costume for damsels that grace the parquet.

Others set a limit to the view of those behind them by setting up a wall of loops and ends of ribbon from shoulder to shoulder, with one under the chin which threatens to obstruct the vision of the wearer. Fortunately, however, most of these "obstructionists" prefer to sit in the boxes where they become ornaments and additions to the general spectacular effect which is aimed at nowadays on most stages.

THIS AND THAT.

The German government is now proposing to expend upward of 2,000,000 sterling on light railways.

Sir Hubert Maxwell, in his monthly budget of Naturalist Notes, speaks of a single fox fur fetching as much as $850.

Pressed by the builder, and unable to pay his bills, the owner of a boat on the Seine has named it "The Floating Debt."

The "fisherman's ring" is the signet of the pope. Its bezel bears an impression of St. Peter in his boat with fishing nets.

The German emperor has contributed 10,000 marks to the fund for the erection of a monument commemorating the battle of Leipzig in 1813.

A writer in the Frankfurter Zeitung says that horseshoes is the most nourishing of meats and its taste is hardly distinguishable from beef.

A Valuable Prescribing. Editor Morrison, of Worthington, Ind., "Sun," writes: "You have a valuable prescription in Electric Bitters, and I can cheerfully recommend it for Constipation and Sick Headache, and as a general system tonic it has no equal." Mrs. Annie Stehle, 2935 Cottage Grove Ave., Chicago, was all run down, could not eat nor digest food, had a backache which never left her and felt tired and weary, but six bottles of Electric Bitters restored her health and renewed her strength. Price 50 cents and $1.00. Get a Bottle at W. H. Steyer's Drug Store.

Boston Shoe House Falls. Boston, Jan. 21.—Smith & Stoughton, one of the largest firms in the shoe trade in the country, assigned Monday to Chas. W. Fildes, of Washburn, and Charles Edson, of Whitman. The liabilities are estimated at more than $300,000. The assets are unknown.
